“ My grandmother was only angry with me once. My brother and I pulled the cushion off her white ottoman and went for a ride on the slick-leather-side down the living room stairs. It might be the only time she ever raised her voice at me. In her defense, it was a bit dangerous.

In the summer, we spent hours in their pool, we picked berries, watered plants, and baked. I contend that I was a better cook at 8 years old than I am today. We played 'I Spy' for hours on the front porch while watching the boats go by.

I remember the long walk to the garden with my name etched in concrete along the way. A swing with a wooden seat, dangling from a giant tree perched in the center of the yard. The thing I remember most, however, is a sense of comfort with an understanding that I was always welcome at my grandparents house. Always. My heart is breaking. Rest in peace Grandma. ~ Love always, Cheri Jean
