“ While growing up I spent most of my time at my grandparents house while my parents worked 40 hours a week; from the time I was born till I was 5. I will always remeber my grandpa waiting at the bottom of the steps to get me out of my car seat. Grandma would be in the house ready to greet me. She made me countless pan cakes and bowls of spaghetti. I remeber her getting me ready, she would always cut my bangs and curl my hair before I went any where. I was like her little Barbie doll. when I would spend the night I would come down stairs every morning to her reading the bible. When I walked into the room her face would light up, even when she first was put into the nursing home I can remeber sitting there with her and all her friends and she would say "isn't she pretty" or "boy your teeth are white" or the countless times she said "I love you" she would always make me feel like a million bucks. I will never forgot all or the bible stories she read to me. The chocolate milk she made me. And all of the summers I spent with them swinging on their porch swing and swimming in my Aunt's swimming pool. She always made sure I got to preschool and story hour and that I we the cleanest kid in town. There are so many memories I will forever cherish with them. Though I am so heart broken to lose both of my grandparents and my dad. I know that they're in a better place, they're not suffering and most importantly they're happy. I know that some day I will be reunited with my family and there will be no more darkness or tears.

I'll see you again someday, in a much happier place. I love you grandma. No matter where this crazy world takes me. You will always be in my heart.

“ I have many fond of memories throughout my life, most of them connected to the church. She taught my very first Sunday School class as a toddler. I remember her helping with VBS when I young and then the many years she worked at the church dinners. I bought groceries at her and Bob's store for my mom often. I always enjoyed talking with her and definitely considered her a pillar in our community.

My sympathies to Sheree and the rest of the family. Heaven has gained a beautiful angel.
