“ I'd light a thousand candles if I thought it would make this better or easier. Still have your ashes on my mantle and there they will stay until I figure out what you would have wanted done with them. I will always keep the majority. But there were places we went I think you would have liked some of them scattered.

“ When you passed, I wasn't sure what I would do with your ashes. I feel blessed that I have them. Whom else should they be with, but the woman you loved and loved you back? And the kind people at the funeral home agreed. I have them in an urn on my mantel in my room, and a few in a small green urn necklace with a peace sign, that I thought you'd like. A friend told me this- if you had wanted to be in Louisiana you would have gone there in life; you chose to stay in West Virginia, and lived the last 6 years of your life here. So here you will stay. Peace out babe, and I'll send you some sunshine again today. I hope you're dancing on the clouds up there and listening to some cool music. I love you. ~Karen

“ Mike Merritt was the most charming guy I ever met, next to my father. He reminded me of Dennis Quaid's character in the movie "The Big Easy", only partly because he was originally from Louisiana. He oozed that sweet Southern charm. We met while we were both working at the McLure House Hotel, in downtown Wheeling, West Virginia, in September of 2008, and we were married 4 months later. Our honeymoon was spent at Oglebay Park Hotel and Resort, and it was magical. I have lots of beautiful memories of Mike, that I will cherish forever. Mike was a good soul, yet a tortured one. "On va se revoir plus tard", Mike. I wish you peace.
