“ If there is one way to make a man live on, it is through living their teachings. I learned a lot from my Uncle Dick. He is one of several people in my family who lived the values of loving family and proving you can be a tough guy while still having a sensitive heart. He also taught me and my brother several things my Mamma probably wishes we never learned. But his teachings have enhanced my life nonetheless. One of my favorite memories that would fit into this category would have to be learning to shoot guns. . . at bottles of Budweiser we helped the local bar "recycle." Uncle Dick taught me how to "pick out the thick heavy ones, they don't break as easy when you throw them into the crick." And of course he taught me how to shoot. That memory, several others and all the teachings will stay with me forever. Love to all experiencing the feelings of loss. God bless. ~Adamo Busacca
